

I do not recognise the political body.

Which is to say the political body is not like my own.

By which I mean, the greater constituency of my being remains largely unrepresented.

To which I might add, remains without means of representation.

Which raises the question; does the unrecognised state fail by proxy or by neglect?

I am less convinced by theories of knowing than by the sound of water poured from a height.